

Reflections

I found that although the noise level for the multiplication war got high, the children were really excited and willing to play. It was fun for them and they learned a lot from other students answering the questions. The squads for the math competition were divided well amongst individual skill level and I saw a lot of cooperation built within the teams.

The introduction of the new math digits was hard for some to grasp that have not fully comprehended the 2 digit multiplication yet (KS, LT, and KR). I will make sure to spend some extra time with these students.
