Saving Lives in Haiti A STORY OF THE GLOBAL JESUIT NETWORK IN ACTION

How a Loyola alumnus, a Loyola mom and a Detroit Province Jesuit were brought together by their Jesuit connections to serve on a team of medical "first responders" in the critical days and weeks after Haiti's catastrophic quake n January 11, 2010, William B. McNulty III '95-a former Marine who served in the infantry and intelligence—was working in Washington, D.C., where he co-owns TitleTen, Inc., a national security-focused film production, development and consulting company.

Haitian-born Glenview resident Rosite Feteau Merentie was juggling motherhood (she is the parent of Loyola students Ramsley '10 and Claudia '12) and her work as a hospice nurse providing end-of-life care for terminally ill patients.

Br. James J. Boynton, S.J.—a Jesuit who has taught high school in India, Nepal, Cleveland and Detroit and served as vocation director for the Detroit Provincehad arrived in Ouanaminthe, Haiti, nine days earlier to begin his latest assignment as director of the Jesuit-run St. Ignace school of Foi et Joie (Faith and Joy).

McNulty, Merentie and Boynton had never met. But, within a week, they would be united by their Jesuit connections to carry out a common humanitarian mission of unimaginable proportions.

The geological chain of events that brought these three strangers together began on January 12, when two tectonic plates beneath Haiti shifted and a section along the fault line where the two plates had been jammed together since 1751 jerked apart. The rupture released more than 250 years of pent-up pressure and generated a 7.0-magnitude earthquake that devastated Port-au-Prince, the capital of Merentie's Haitian homeland.

Within 24 hours, McNulty had received a call to action in the form of a Facebook post issued by his friend and fellow former Marine, Jake Wood:

ATTENTION

I am legitimately trying to find a way to get to Haiti to help with the disaster relief. I think it will be possible to fly into the Dominican Republic and cross the border over land.

> IS ANYONE WILLING TO HELP? Looking to fly out tomorrow red-eye and return sometime next Tues. or Wed. Let me know.

Five minutes after reading the post, McNulty called his friend and said, "Jake, I'm in."

"As a former Marine, I felt that I had some skills that would be useful," McNulty explains today. "Basic combat lifesaving skills are taught to anyone who serves in the military, so I knew how to clean and dress wounds. And I was comfortable in austere environments with a lot of uncertainty.'

With no time to lose, Wood and McNulty spun into action. They formed an emergency response team with two Milwaukee firefighters and began formulating plans of vehicles, fuel and phone service following the quake-it to travel independently, with private funding, to Haiti to aid in the medical relief operations taking place there. With these original four members, Team Rubicon was born.

Despite media reports of armed mobs in Port-au-Prince and advisories by the U.S. Department of Defense and the Red Cross not to proceed because the situation was too dangerous, the group remained undeterred. The team employed social media technology such as Facebook and Twitter to spread the word about Team Rubicon's mission and raise cash via private donations to PayPal.

McNulty also enlisted the aid of an old family friend, Dr. Mauricio Consalter, who began assembling a medical team to rendezvous with Team Rubicon once a secure base of operations had been established in Port-au-Prince. In search of funding and contacts in Haiti, McNulty then emailed friends and family in the Loyola community. When McNulty's uncle, Loyola Academy Vice President of Academic and Student Affairs David K. McNulty, received the email, he forwarded it to the Jesuits at Loyola University, who forwarded it on to Br. Boynton in Ouanaminthe, Haiti.

Br. Boynton was already at his computer when the email from Loyola University arrived. He'd been trying to assemble a medical team and arrange transportation for the six-hour drive to Port-au-Prince, but-given the lack had been an exercise in frustration.

"I had just prayed St. Ignatius' prayer for generosity and hit my email refresh key," Boynton recalls, "and the forwarded email from William McNulty appeared in my inbox."

Within 15 minutes, Br. Boynton had contacted McNulty and the two began to coordinate their relief efforts via Skype, an Internet video and voice service. Br. Boynton agreed to meet up with Team Rubicon at a prearranged point in Santo Domingo (the airport in Port-au-Prince had not yet been cleared for air traffic) and accompany them over the border and across the island to Port-au-Prince. Boynton, who had taken five weeks of Creole language instruction in preparation for his educational mission in Ouanaminthe, would also do his best to serve as a translator and guide for Team Rubicon. The Jesuit Novitiate in Port-au-Prince, with its gated courtyard, would serve as the base for the team's operations.

Meanwhile, back in Illinois, Loyola mom Rosite Feteau Merentie had just received her own call to action.

"It was a text message from McNulty's friend, Dr. Consalter, a physician I work with at Vitas Innovative Hospice Care," she explains. "He was looking for medical professionals to join Team Rubicon and he knew I would be personally invested because of my roots in Haiti."

Consalter's text message was brief and to the point. "We hadn't even spoken since the quake had happened,"

1 Loyola parent and hospice nurse Rosite Feteau Merentie cares for a young earthquake survivor. 2 All that is left of a multi-story building in Haiti's capital city of Port-au-Prince. 3 Dr. Mauricio Consalter and Merentie treat a Haitian man's facial wound. 4 Br. James J. Boynton, S.J. comforts a Haitian woman while her wounds are treated. "Ignatius says that we are contemplatives in action, which means that we pray and our prayers lead us to service," reflects Boynton today. "Team Rubicon showed me that many people in the Jesuit network prayed and were moved to serve. This was very gratifying—because the people of Haiti need prayers, they need action and they need hope."

President's Message

By the time you read this, the Class of 2010 will have passed across the stage and received their diplomas. The 100th commencement exercises of Loyola Academy are history and our newest alumni have moved on to the next phase of life. For 100 years, lives have been formed by the experience of Jesuit education at Loyola. Reading through the pages of Focus, we catch a glimpse of the incredible lives that have blossomed for our alumni. We are blessed to share this treasure that is Catholic education in the Jesuit tradition.

It is a human drama that plays out in our mission. As Ignatius would say, there are lights and shadows. We struggle to come to know ourselves as loved sinners. Together, we wrestle with the deepest questions of meaning and the conflict between good and evil. Ignatius was clear and unapologetic in his assessment that the spirit of light and the spirit of darkness battle daily in the context of our world and in our own lives. Rooted in our most deeply held beliefs about the goodness of God and our ultimate destiny to share eternal life with God, we confront the shadows and strive to live in the light. We know it is not easy. We have painful reminders of the darkness on the world stage and closer to home. In recent days, we at Loyola have been made painfully aware of the hurt we can do to one another and the need for healing and reconciliation.

On a personal note, let me say that I became a priest and a Jesuit because I felt called to share the good and hopeful news of the Gospel. I grew up in a wonderful family that was very committed to our shared Catholic faith. I attended Catholic grade school, high school, college and graduate school. As I matured, I grew into the faith that had been passed on to me by my parents and began to make it my own. I love the Catholic faith and I love being a Jesuit. Like you, I have been deeply saddened and angered by the many stories of abuse and failed leadership that have emerged in our church in recent years. The darkness of the sins that have been revealed is significant and frightening. There is such a fundamental and profound question at work in all of this as we struggle to confront the presence of both light and darkness in our world, in one another and in ourselves. I still believe that the message of Jesus and the power of his love are the final act of the human drama. Rooted in that belief, I am hopeful that we can help people to heal, create more just and transparent structures and build up the wounded body of Christ.

Know of my ongoing prayers for you and your family. Please join me in praying for the Class of 2010 as they move on to live extraordinary lives of faith and service.

Per. Potuik E. Mc Shath, 5.g.

The William T. Kernan '02 O'Shaughnessy Endowment Fund

A grateful O'Shaughnessy alumnus gives back to the program that helped build the foundation for his academic and professional success

O'Shaughnessy Program Director ChrisJon L. Simon '86.

ANY YOUNG PROFESSIONALS would view a $10,000 performance bonus as a welcome reward for their hard work—and a good excuse to do some traveling, spend a couple of weeks on the slopes, spruce up their wardrobe or invest in a new set of wheels.

But William T. Kernan '02 did none of the above. Instead, he gave it away.

The tale becomes even more intriguing when one learns about the circumstances behind his bonus.

The 26-year-old Kernan—who works as the chief accountant for PRP Wine International—had received the bonus from PRP's grateful overseas owners for discovering why the wine company couldn't seem to turn a profit, despite brisk sales. The backstory? After spotting some suspicious entries in the company's accounting records, Kernan had done some financial sleuthing to ferret out and eventually expose a seven-year, $1.5 million employee embezzlement scheme that had pushed the company to the brink of bankruptcy.

To the owners, Kernan was a hero. They wanted to express their gratitude by sending him on an all-expenses-paid trip to Europe or buying him an expensive piece of art. But Kernan wasn't interested.

``I didn't want to benefit personally from this bad thing that had happened to my company," he confides. "So I told the owners that the only gift I would be willing to accept was a check that could be used to fund Loyola Academy's O'Shaughnessy Program. This way, something good could come out of their misfortune—and more Loyola students could benefit from what the O'Shaughnessy Program has to offer."

The O'Shaughnessy Program was one of the best things that could have happened to me.

WILLIAM T. KERNAN '02 O'Shaughnessy Endowment Fund benefactor Kernan is quick to acknowledge his debt to the O'Shaughnessy Program, which serves hundreds of students a year who need additional academic support to excel in a rigorous, college-preparatory environment.

"O'Shaughnessy was a stepping stone to where I am today," he emphasizes. "I didn't always have a great attitude when I was in high school and I wasn't always as motivated as I should have been. My O'Shaughnessy teachers exhibited a great deal of patience with me and used some really effective motivational techniques to help me realize my full potential. I always felt that my O'Shaughnessy teachers understood me and cared about my future success in life. They helped me immensely. The O'Shaughnessy Program was one of the best things that could have happened to me."

"It is very gratifying to know that Bill has made this gift because he feels that he wouldn't be where he is today without the additional support that he received from the O'Shaughnessy Program," says O'Shaughnessy Program Director ChrisJon L. Simon '86. "That connection is something that we always hope our O'Shaughnessy students will recognize as they go on to achieve success at Loyola, in college, in their careers and in life."

"What is truly inspiring to me about this gift is that it comes from such a young alumnus and one of my own classmates," adds Loyola Principal Gifts Officer Elizabeth P. Kadison '02. "When people like Bill and others give back to Loyola Academy, they are joining a community of Ramblers who have decided to make Loyola a priority.

"Bill's gift is especially helpful," Kadison notes, "because the O'Shaughnessy fee charged to students in the program is less than half of the Academy's actual cost per student. Therefore, Bill's gift will help Loyola cover this gap and provide the foundation for the ongoing funding of the O'Shaughnessy Program. It is our hope that this kind of generosity and leadership will inspire others to do the same."

This is Kernan's hope as well.

"I think it's important for us, as Loyola alumni, to realize that we were very blessed to have this education and to be a part of the Loyola community," Kernan stresses. "I gave to the O'Shaughnessy Program because it had special meaning for me. I hope this gift inspires my fellow alumni to think about a particular program that they benefited from during their years at Loyola—and to consider a gift to support programming or fund a scholarship in that area. I had some special circumstances that enabled me to start the O'Shaughnessy Endowment Fund, but I want to emphasize—especially to other young alumni who may not have the financial resources to make a large gift—that it doesn't take a lot of money to make a difference."

Kernan pauses for a moment to reflect.

"One thing that I took away from the circumstances that led up to my decision to make this gift is that success isn't about the quick dollar or getting your 15 minutes of fame. If you are a hard worker and an honest person—and you are aware of your community and what you can give back to that community—that is what true success is all about."

Spoken like a true man for others. +

Getting Better All the Time

OYOLA'S TRADITION of providing academic support to help ensure a successful college preparatory journey for every Rambler began nearly four decades ago, when former Loyola

President Rev. John H. Reinke, S.J. and former Headmaster Rev. James C.L. Arimond, S.J. '57 established the O'Shaughnessy Program in 1973. This highly respected program continues to serve hundreds of Loyola students each year.

In its new home in Loyola's Academic Resource Center, the O'Shaughnessy Program is now supported by three Academic Resource classrooms for student use, a conference room, multimedia teaching tools and three full-time resource teachers.

"O'Shaughnessy students must complete the same rigorous college preparatory course of study required of every Rambler," explains O'Shaughnessy Program Director ChrisJon L. Simon '86, who was an O'Shaughnessy student himself during his Rambler years. "O'Shaughnessy students simply receive more academic support by enrolling in two or more classes with small student-to-teacher ratios and attending daily, supervised study sessions."

According to Simon, the program has evolved and expanded over the years to "provide more students with more resources."

"We now offer a structured O'Shaughnessy curriculum for sophomores and juniors, as well as freshmen," he points out. "This year, we are adding even more academic support activities and services, including after-school exam-study sessions."

This expansion reflects the administration's ongoing—and growing—commitment to meeting the different learning needs of Loyola's diverse student population.

Simon now hopes to tap into another educational resource: the wisdom and experience of O'Shaughnessy alumni. "I would love to enlist some of our graduates to serve as O'Shaughnessy mentors," he says, "so that they can share their perspective and success stories, provide tutoring support and inspire today's O'Shaughnessy students to achieve their full potential."

Merentie recalls with a chuckle, "yet all the text message said was, 'Are you ready? Let's go."

Merentie didn't need to know more. She simply texted back, "T'm ready. What time?"

Two days after Br. Boynton arrived in Port-au-Prince with Team Rubicon, Merentie boarded a donated United Airlines flight to Haiti with Dr. Consalter and a group of doctors, nurses and medical technicians from Illinois Masonic Hospital. Their arrival at the Jesuit Novitiate in Port-au-Prince marked the beginning of a medical and humanitarian mission that McNulty, Merentie, Boynton and the other members of Team Rubicon are not likely to forget.

More than a week had passed since the quake had toppled Haiti's impoverished and ill-prepared capital city, killing 230,000 people, injuring 300,000 and leaving 1.2 million in need of emergency shelter. Yet, unbelievably, Team Rubicon was one of the first medical relief groups to mobilize.

"It was then that I felt that we had added a new paradigm for disaster response," reflects McNulty today. "Because Team Rubicon was small and nimble, we were able to hit the ground running. And because our volunteers had medical, military and fire rescue experience, we were able to go out into the tent cities that had formed since the quake to perform field triage and treatment."

On their first day out, the team members loaded their supplies into two Toyota trucks provided by the Jesuits and drove to a refugee camp, where they immediately began to set up a pharmacy and triage area.

Despite the news reports that she had seen, Merentie was unprepared for the sight of thousands of her fellow Haitians—dazed, hurt, hungry and homeless—with terrible wounds that had been left to fester for eight days.

"I cannot even describe what I saw," says Merentie, her voice breaking. "The line of people in need of medical care stretched out as far as the eye could see. They took it upon themselves to triage their most badly wounded to the front of the crowd, and they were so grateful, so happy to see us. For a moment, I just stood there with tears rolling down my face."

But tears wouldn't help the wounded, so Merentie rolled up her sleeves, took a deep breath and "went into nursing mode."

For the next 18 days, the members of Team Rubicon worked side by side, treating thousands of patients with internal injuries, crush wounds, amputations, infections, gangrene and compound fractures—fashioning casts from door and window frames and tree branches.

The team members stopped only for some muchneeded sleep and the spiritual sustenance they derived from Br. Boynton's daily prayer and reflection sessions. While the Illinois Masonic doctors performed surgeries, Br. Boynton and the other team members moved from camp to camp, cleaning and dressing wounds, treating dehydration and diarrhea and directing hungry Haitians to food sources.

Every so often, there were moments of true spirituality in the midst of what could only be described as abject misery.

"We were cleaning one woman's wounds and the pain was agonizing," says Merentie. "Br. Boynton, who was holding the woman's hand, started singing to take her mind off of the pain—and everyone in the area began singing along with him to comfort her."

By January 30, Team Rubicon had provided medical care for thousands of Haitians and saved countless lives. With the large humanitarian organizations up and running, Team Rubicon's mission to "bridge the critical gap between large natural disasters and conventional aid response" in Haiti had been fulfilled. It was time to go home.

But McNulty, Merentie and Br. Boynton still had promises to keep.

After the Haiti quake, McNulty and Wood formalized Team Rubicon as a 501(c)(3) organization. The new nonprofit—comprised of volunteer doctors, firefighters, medics, nurses, physician assistants and military veterans who "believe that inaction is not an option" — will continue to serve at disaster sites around the world.

Merentie and her brother, Wilfrid Feteau, have formed the Organization for Haitian Development and Progress (OHDEPRO), a nonprofit focusing on health and education programs for Haitians.

And Br. Boynton? He'll be staying on in Port-au-Prince for the foreseeable future. "I have been working with volunteers from H.E.A.R.T. 9/11 as they train Haitians on the safe demolition and restoration of buildings," he reports. "Going forward, I will also be facilitating the efforts of volunteers from International Samaritan, a Jesuit service organization. Our mission now is to help the people of Haiti rebuild." +

A COLUMN BY ALUMNI CHAPLAIN REV. JAMES C.L. ARIMOND, S.J. '57

Rev. James C. L. Arimond, S.J. '57

As Loyola is celebrating its first 100 years,

I thought it would be appropriate to dedicate this column to the history of the Chicago Catholic Athletic League, for the Catholic League has played a vital part in Loyola's history. Now in its 98th year, the League will be celebrating its centennial in 2011-2012.

Though not the oldest high school athletic conference in the State of Illinois, the Chicago Catholic League, since the demise of the original Suburban League (New Pictured in 1974 are Loyola Academy's representatives in the Chicago Catholic League: (I-r) Frank J. Amato, newly elected president of the Coaches' Association; Rev. James C.L. Arimond, S.J. O'Loughlin '59, newly elected secretary of the Coaches' Association.

Trier, Oak Park, Evanston, Highland Park, et al), has now been in operation longer than any other. It all began on October 3, 1912, when representatives of eight parochial schools met in Chicago's Great Northern Hotel (demolished in 1992) to found the Catholic League. Those charter members were: Loyola Academy, St. Cyril (Mt. Carmel), DePaul Academy, St. Philip, St. Ignatius, DeLaSalle, Cathedral and St. Stanislaus. In that very first year of its existence, the League sponsored only basketball and indoor baseball. A football schedule and championship began the following year, though Loyola did not participate in that competition until 1923. In the ensuing years, the League began sponsorship of track (1916); swimming, golf and tennis (1923); cross-country (1946); wrestling (1964); water polo (1965); soccer (1967); and volleyball (1992). Baseball was discontinued after the 1930 season, but was reinstated in 1958.

For the first 61 years of its existence, the Chicago Catholic League operated independently of the Illinois High School Association (IHSA). The League was nationally renowned, especially in football and basketball. But, during the late 1960s and early 1970s, as the need developed for a wider base of competition, especially in such sports as swimming, track, wrestling, golf, tennis and baseball, the principals of the League's schools began to consider the possibility of joining the IHSA. In 1971, I was elected as chairman of the Board of Principals (nobody else wanted the job!) and continued to lead the League for the next eight years. Along with Loyola Athletic Director Fred Wright (president of the Athletic Directors Association), I was privileged to attempt to lead the League, against very stiff opposition, to forego its independence and consider joining the IHSA. Believe me, it was not an easy task.

After much discussion, many arguments over pros and cons and numerous meetings with the IHSA staff, the Catholic League principals voted 11-1 in favor of joining the State Association. (I will not reveal the identity of the one dissenting school!) Though the momentous vote was taken on January 30, 1973, the actual entrance into the IHSA did not take place until June 30, 1974. The reason for the 18-month hiatus was to give the League a full year of competition during which it could make the transition to those rules and practices of the IHSA, which differed from those current in the Catholic League (e.g., lightweight basketball, spring football practice, etc.). Though there was a multitude of objections from many in the Catholic League to the decision to join the IHSA, I sincerely believe that the benefits that have accrued since 1974 to the Catholic League schools, and particularly to our student athletes, have far outweighed the original objections.

A final note: this year marks the 50th anniversary of the Catholic League Hall of Fame, sponsored by the Catholic League Athletic Coaches Association. During those years, 47 Loyolans (both alumni and staff) have been inducted. Current staff members so honored include John A. O'Loughlin '59, Daniel Seeberg '75, James M. Jackimiec '66, Frank J. Amato, Thomas J. Fitzgerald, James T. O'Donnell and yours truly '57.

Those of us associated with the Chicago Catholic League are extremely proud of its heritage before joining the IHSA in 1974 and since, and hopeful that its future and Loyola's part in it will continue to be bright!

Winter Sports Recap

Men's Swimming and Diving had another great year with an undefeated regular season, Junior Varsity and Varsity Chicago Catholic League championships, a sectional championship and a sixth-place finish at the IHSA state championship meet. Ramblers broke three school records, had 12 individual Catholic League champions, 10 individual sectional champions and seven All-State swimmers and divers.

Women's Basketbal players Katie Faught '11 and Audrey Gaughan '10 were named First Team All-GCAC. Wrestlers Patrick Dougherty '10 and Tom Kelly '10 qualified for the Individual State Championship, with Tom's quarter-final-finish ties being the farthest advancement of a Rambler wrestler. Both Tom and Pat were named First Team All-Chicago Catholic League and All-Area. Pat broke the single season win record with 41 wins, the single season pin record with 25 and the all-time career win record with 92 varsity wins. +

Celebrating the Investment in Our Future Leaders

On April 15, Loyola President Rev. Patrick E. McGrath, S.J. hosted the first of what he promised would be many Scholarship Donor Receptions. Approximately 70 scholarship recipients met with nearly 40 of the donors who have made their Loyola education possible. Harland Scholar Andreas G. Safakas '05, photographed above with Loyola supporters Margaret M. "Mimi" and Edward Fiorentino, told the group his story, stating, "I would like to make something very clear-I am not merely a scholarship recipient; I am an investment. I hope to one day sit among you, hearing the story of another blessed young person and granting this student his or her own opportunity of a lifetime." In 2010-2011, Loyola will award $3.75 million of needbased tuition assistance to nearly 30 percent of our students. +

Dr. Elizabeth O'Shaughnessy

Loyola Social Studies teacher Dr. Elizabeth O'Shaughnessy has co-authored a college textbook, The Struggle for Power and Influence in Cities and States (Pearson Education, 2011), with former Alderman Dick Simpson, currently chair of the Political Science Department at the University of Illinois Chicago, and former Illinois State Representative James Nowlan, currently a downstate newspaper editor. The trio drew on their former and current experience as elected officials—O'Shaughnessy was elected in April 2009 as a West Deerfield Township trustee—to emphasize politics in action at the state and local government levels. Using contemporary well-known figures such as Mayors Daley and Bloomberg and Governor Schwarzenegger, as well as the Obama election, the text brings to life the struggle for power and influence that activates politics. Dr. O'Shaughnessy, who holds a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Illinois at Chicago, partnered with fellow Loyola Social Studies teacher Michael Barry to write a highly praised instructor's manual for the textbook.

O'Shaughnessy and Barry are the coordinators of an election participation program for Loyola students—a requirement during elections for students taking political science and a recommendation for those taking U.S. history. During the recent primary election, 95 Ramblers served as election judges and five students volunteered for political campaigns. "I believe that civic engagement is a secular version of 'committed to doing justice,' which is part of the Profile of a Jesuit Graduate at Graduation," notes O'Shaughnessy, who started stuffing mailboxes at age 11 for her grandfather and father, who were both aldermen. "When students become involved as election judges, they are bringing the values they have learned here at Loyola to real-world situations—it's one of the ways for them to improve society." +

William B. McNulty III '95 on a medical relief mission after Haiti's catastrophic earthquake. Story on cover. Receiving too many copies of Focus?

You receive a copy of Focus. So do your alumni children. Grandpa moved in last year and he gets one as well.

Why is your family receiving so many copies? Alumni Relations Director Dennis R. Stonequist '90 explains, "We want to stay in touch with every member of the Loyola family. So we keep all alumni, graduate parents and grandparents on our mailing list. Our alumni, especially during those first years out of college, don't always keep us updated with address changes. So Mom and Dad keep getting their child's copy of Focus."

Loyola Academy publishes Focus four times a year for Loyola and Marillac alumni, parents and friends.

Please send correspondence, address changes and requests to receive Focus via email to Robin Hunt, Focus Editor, Loyola Academy, 1100 Laramie Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois 60091 or rhunt@loy.org.
